The Earl of Roslyn can act!

Incredible as it may seem, he can! Destructive as it may be of all precedent, all tradition, he can! He is not the first belted earl, you know, to bid for the applause and cash of American playgoers. We had our Yarmouth-Heaven help us!-and on his departure we would cheerfully have sworn off the entire Burke's Peerage and Landed Gentry, with the Almanach de Gotha thrown in, so far as theatrical entertainment was con-

We were not intolerant. We said: "Let them come to our shores, let them marry our heiresses, Borrow our money, look at our scenery, write books about us-in a word, let them have the run of the premises, but -DON'T LET THEM ACT."

Such was the effect of the Earl of Yarmouth, and deep was the sigh we Roslyn was coming.

How Did It Happen!

But the Earl of Roslyn can act! How he happened to be engaged by Mr. in which he has made such a good Charles Frohman I don't know. Probably Mr. Frohman had never seen him he possessed such an accomplishment. guard his secret from the great manager, who had figured out his profits rom a chapter in Burke's Peerage and ripe newspaper reputation for aristocratic gideiness. Samuel Elias's Nerves Break Down as He Is Ready to Start Own Business.

Samuel Elias, forty-three years old of No. 121 West One Hundred and Thirty-eighth street, was found dead early this morning on the Unionport road, near Westchester. He had swallowed money to start in some business for himself.

Two months ego he thought he had enough and decided to go into the grocery business. Just as he had all the arrangements made and was ready to start his twenty-three years of hard work came upon him suddenly and his nerves broke down. For the last week he had become more and more nervous each day.

fought to prevent the theft. He says he was overpowered and then bound and gagged and left on the cellar floor. A man named Williams was constructing a coal bin in the cellar, but had to go away to get some screws. When he returned he found Tyler lying on the floor. A rope had been passed several times around his legs and arms and then knotted, and there was a small gag in his mouth.

The police ridicule Tyler's story and say they think the young man bound and gagged himself in order to pose as the hero of an adventure and elleit the admiration of Miss Preisel, to whom he has been attentive for some time. It is said that he could have easily bound himself in the way that he was found.

Tyler is a clerk in a business house here and bears a good reputation.
